When the last Gothic offensive in Dalmatia petered out, the Gepids recaptured Sirmium, which now became their "capital." By that time, however, they had already long passed the height of their power.

537 AD

At the siege of Rome (about 537) a Gothic chief was pinned to a tree by a ballista bolt strengthened through the addition of the Gallic army (after treaty with Franks) VITIGIS was numerically superior to his Roman adversary. Retreating to Ravenna, gathering the Gothic forces in northern Italy, re-equipping them with offensive weapons and armor; all this in addition to the constitutional measures to secure the kingdom

 - reveals the well planned moves of a seasoned commander. Now did Vitigis neglect to take them in attacking the Romans in Dalmatia; by an entire victory for us competitors and orderliness as early as 537 we are making the king of the Perit defeated from Rome

Vitigis and the Goths had marched from Ravenna and stood before the gates of Rome. For more than a year they assaulted the walls but they suffered great losses. The heavy artillery as well as mounted and armoured archers wrought havoc among the Gothic lancers and foot warriors. Moreover, with the arrival of Simon reinforcements the 6th, numerous supplies were dropped.

Relieved to find the people people who were the last of a murdered party friendly to the 8th.

The long road account in 18th day of may nearly succeeded. After a year Vilago arranged an armistice from which only Bolivians profited

VITIGIS concluded the negotiations which had begun under King Theodahad: he renounced Provence, transferred to the Franks by way of a treaty the Ostrogothic overlordship over the ALAMANNI, handed over to them the entire region north of the Alps, and the Alpine region itself; and paid out 2000 pounds of gold. The Gothic peace had outlived Theodoric by a decade and had Noted activity more than 40 years.
